

SANDEN COLLECTION IS PUT ON VIEW

Groups of Works by American Artist Shown in Levy Galleries.

WYANTS UNUSUALLY FINE

Assemblage Shows Collector
Exercised Great Patience and Discretion.

The purchase on bloc of Dr. A. T. Sanden's collection of American art, announced some time ago by The Sun, was an indication that in spite of the war, the art world was still going on, and that the business of picture selling was beginning to adjust itself to conditions as it already has in London and Paris.

It was incidentally, also, another proof, if any were now needed, of the actually increased interest that the war has made in American paintings. Before this it had been remarked that the picture auctions that whatever the fate of the old masters might be in those days the prestige of the new American masters was secure. In spite of the war, a number of record American prices have been established.

All American Works.

The Dr. Sanden collection is now on public view in the John Levy Galleries. It is composed of a group of works by Americans whose fame has been already proved by the auction room test, and it is a test, the results of which, considering the study with great interest. There are ten landscapes by Alexander H. Wyant, four by J. Francis Murphy and three by W. T. Fry, and of Horatio Walker there are three. Little has been written about Dr. Sanden as a collector, but it is evident he had great discretion. Also he must have had patience, for the collection is highly representative of the artists named, and as such as find great favor in the eyes of American collectors. The Wyant landscapes are unusually rich with all the peculiarly vibrant feeling for atmosphere and color, that his admirers know; while the larger Murphys have the luminous quality that are characteristic of his most popular landscapes.

One of the pictures by Fry is "Corymbus in Villa," showing a French peasant working in a garden outside of a farmhouse, while the smoke from a burning pile of refuse rises against the evening sky. The picture has a quality that is commonly associated with the name.

NEW GALLERY OPENED.

Rare Antiques and Tapestries
Displayed at Dawson's.

An enterprise of interest to art lovers is the opening of the new Dawson Gallery, in East Fifty-sixth street, for the display of rare antiques; and it is not without significance to all students of the time that the gallery is located there is not only money in the country for art, in spite of the war, but that people who are profiting from war investments are turning to the arts among their investments.

The Dawson Gallery was formerly the residence of a well known New Yorker, and while many changes in it have been made for the purpose of making it a gallery rather than a residence, the furniture and hangings in each room have been chosen with great care for the effect and for the period and much of the agreeableness of the installation may be traced to the simplicity of the arrangement.

The chief feature of the display is a handsome room which has been entirely rebuilt for the sake of a rare set of Regency Aubusson tapestries which have never been shown in New York before. The tapestries have not been identified as yet, but it was an artist closely under the influence of Watteau. The designs are of a high order, and the color is of a richness and beauty that is characteristic of the most popular landscapes.

Another important item is a set of three oil paintings carved with saints and church edifices, which were once owned by the Marquis of Hertford, of Wallace collection fame, who left them to his secretary, Sir John Murray Scott, who carried them to America. The paintings were sold at Christie's in London. The carving of the figures is bold and full of life, and the architecture of the saints is also interesting.

One of the drawing rooms is rich with furniture of periods affected by the Chinese influence. There is a gorgeous gilt console, a Chinese Chippendale mirror, gilded, and the wall decorations are of French chinoiserie. The figures in these decorations are painted over the wall, and are of a high order of execution. There are many examples of fine cabinet in the collection, including signed French pieces, Chippendale desks and tables, and a number of other fine pieces. There is also a group of French painted point-emboiseries, quaint in design and amazingly clever in needlework.

B. Guggenheim was the principal buyer of the day, paying $1,050 for a bronze incense burner by a Chinese Chippendale mirror, gilded, and the wall decorations are of French chinoiserie. The figures in these decorations are painted over the wall, and are of a high order of execution. There are many examples of fine cabinet in the collection, including signed French pieces, Chippendale desks and tables, and a number of other fine pieces. SPENCE ALMUSE CONCERT.

for Homeless Babies.

Members of the Spence School Alumnae Society gave a successful entertainment last evening in Aeolian Hall for the benefit of an institution for homeless babies, which they support in East Sixty-second street. The concert was given in place of the musical comedy which had been scheduled for the evening for several years. The hall was filled with former pupils of Miss Spence's school and their parents and it is expected the net results will amount to $3,000. Those who most generously gave their services were: Miss Frances Alda, of the Metropolitan Opera, Miss Mildred Dilling, harpist, and Miss Alice van Buren, pianist. Miss Alda sang some songs composed by Frank L. Force, who was at the piano, also old English and French songs. Miss Van Buren played a number of compositions of Rubenstein and Chopin and Miss Dilling played arrangements of Debussy's music.
